Department of Criminology, Law and Society George Mason University

Assistant Professor, Tenure Track Position

George Mason University's department of Criminology, Law and Society invites applicants for a full-time, tenure-track Assistant Professor position to start August 2019. The department is a multidisciplinary unit that offers degrees at the bachelor's, master's, and doctoral levels. Our graduate program balances theory, empirical research, and policy applications.

Our undergraduate program has concentrations in law and society, criminal justice, and homeland security. George Mason University has a strong institutional commitment to the achievement of excellence and diversity among its faculty and staff. Applicants with a commitment to equity, inclusion, and student success, and to working with broadly diverse communities, are strongly encouraged to apply.

Responsibilities: We are seeking candidates with significant accomplishments in research, teaching and service. Responsibilities include:

- Active research in any area(s) of criminology, criminal justice, and law and society that complement existing strengths of the department
- Teaching courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels
- Mentoring and supervising graduate student research
- Providing service to the department, college and university by participation on faculty committees
- Providing professional service and contributions to consultancies and individuals outside the university

Required Qualifications:

- PhD in a relevant field of study is required. Applicants nearing the completion of their doctorate will be considered
- The successful candidate should be strongly committed to teaching in a multidisciplinary undergraduate and graduate program with strong evidence of teaching effectiveness
- Demonstrated significant promise in scholarly research and extramural grant activity

Preferred Qualifications:

- Strong publication record in peer-reviewed journals and high quality refereed journals
- Established research agenda with an active line of sustainable, externally funded research

For full consideration, applicants must apply online by October 1, 2018 at <http://jobs.gmu.edu> for position number F305AZ; complete the faculty application; and attach a cover letter, CV, and no more than three representative research articles. Also, three letters of recommendation should be sent directly from the provider, either through e-mail to clsjobs@gmu.edu; or via USPS mail to Ms. Sharon Corradino, Criminology, Law, and Society, George Mason University, MS 4F4, Fairfax, VA 22030. Inquiries about the position can be addressed to the department chair, David Wilson, at dwilsonb@gmu.edu.

George Mason has become an internationally ranked research university that as of Fall 2016 achieved the Carnegie Classification of “highest research activity” or what is often called an “R1” school. More information on the department and the research activities of the faculty and various research centers is available at <http://cls.gmu.edu/>. George Mason University is a public research university known for its diverse student population and is an equal opportunity employer.
